Compliance with Required Assessment item Policy

All NAEYC Accredited Programs must maintain compliance with the NAEYC Required Assessment items. A program must regularly provide NAEYC with information regarding its licensing or regulatory status at the following intervals—application, candidacy, site visit, annual report, renewal—as well as upon request.

If NAEYC learns that a program is in violation of Required Assessment items, NAEYC has the right to open up a review of the program and its accreditation status, which may include additional verification at the program’s expense and/or referral to the Scope and Severity Committee. Such review may lead to a recommendation of deferral of the program’s accreditation.

If, after its review, NAEYC staff determine that the alleged incident did not result in a violation of a Required Assessment item that could lead to the deferral of accreditation status, no further action is needed by the Program and its accreditation status will remain unchanged.
